

the rhino's ass | a rock and a hard place

December 25, 2010

You've been warned

It's all about perspective, and the realization that, no matter how sharp your vision, you won't see it all coming. I'm blind-sided every day by what's commonplace, not just on my streets but rather, everywhere, and from where I stand, oh so much appears oh so wrong. As every corner offers another example of humans behaving badly, our shortcomings as a species are eating my optimism and leaving me emotionally frustrated and exhausted and resolute that you can always find another reason to build an army and put up a fence.

Behind that fence I'm grateful to find the people I love and the things we've built together. My beautiful children and my woman extraordinaire are the only inspiration in this universe that I need to ensure the fence is built to last. Sunday football comes a close second. Still, I'm saddened every day that we need so many fences, including those strips of wood people slap down between grocery collections on the conveyor of everlasting greed.

"Life isn't what it's supposed to be. It's what it is. The way you cope with it is what makes the difference".

I like the sentiment but I'm not inclined to settle for it. Much needs changing and we don't change anything by 'coping'. 'Cope' if that's all that's left, but until then, change your underwear and fight the good fight until you're knackered or run out of smokes.

This blog is really a vent for all that nonsense and I can't make any advance, everlasting claims as to it's entire family compatibility. Regardless of kids, some adults, friends and strangers alike, may take exception to much of what I scribble here. There's not a lot I can do about that except hope that as soon as you're thinking clearly again you might enjoy the site.

Thanks for dropping by.

Chris J. Vaughan Griffiths

COMMENTS | click here to tell me my head's up my ass... again